In the matter of the astection of such a board advice from both sides to the conroversy would be sought and accepted by the President.

Secretary Tumulty, who came over from New York with the newspaper men, went directly to the White House and found the President anxlouely awaiting in his office to get first hand information of the recent developments.

It was announced that the Brotherhood delegates were to be received first and the managers immediately after. The President is familiar with the demands of the men and the counter proposals made by the managers last June. He will lose no time in reaching a conclusion.

There is some reason to believe that before many hours clapse the managers will definitely accede to the eight-hour day demand-thus making the way for arbitration of punitive overtime demands and everything bound up with it.

Elisha Lee would neither affirm nor deny that the managers were seriously considering this proposition, but it is a fact that most of the managers feel now that they will have to give something if the Brotherhoods are to be won over to arbitration may suggest this thought to them not as a condition of what he pur-poses doing but to prevent a national disaster. If the brotherhoods flatly refused arbitration, even in the event of the managers declining to give any promise of an eight hour day, the President is determined to take action that may result in a sudden and swift change of front on the part of the officials of the brotherhoods. This is the opinion of Judge Chambers and other members of the Mediation

Judge Chambers told The Evening World representative before he got off the train that he was never so disgusted in all his life as yesterday when he left Webster Hall.

"The officials of the Brotherhoods are obstinate," he said. "It is the worst kind of folly for any body of men to say they will not arbitrate their grievances. Such an attitude is intolerable. Why, I was shocked when, after we had urged them to reconsider their action, they bluntly told us that they would arbitrate nothing unless they were assured before hand that arbitration would be in their favor."
